ABSTRACT

A system and method that enables a user to calibrate a display by presenting instructions to the user is described. This system and method can enable a user to calibrate a display by presenting instructions to the user that are based on the type or the connection type of display that the user is attempting to calibrate. It can also enable a user to more easily and intuitively calibrate his or her display by presenting a motion video tailored to help the user calibrate a parameter of the user's display.